- Close contacts of people with COVID-19. (People who are identified as close contacts are enrolled unless they opt out.)

Sara Alert allows COVID-19 response teams to quickly and easily provide guidance to people if they develop symptoms. It is not GPS-based, so it does not monitor someone's movement or track their location. For more information about Sara Alert, visit the travel page.

These conditions create a serious risk for dangerous and sometimes deadly heat-related illnesses, such as heat stroke.

Should your community open a center to provide cooling relief for residents, you are asked to take special precautions for gatherings and building occupancy due to the current COVID-19 virus outbreak. Specifically, please follow all guidance set forth by:

Other Updates:

- The branch is planning for a worst-case scenario, a 180-day supply model, and how it will impact operations.

 - The branch put together some initial cost estimates for the additional PPE needed to meet the 180-day comprehensive supply, and the initial forecast exceeds current budget. Further discussions will occur to get a better sense of the cost of necessary PPE, as opposed to having every single type included.
 - The additional inventory would also require additional warehouse capacity. Costs are being assessed for the additional 10,000 square ft of warehouse space needed.
- There are reports that a Vermont patient has used Remdesivir for the first time. The branch is working on a distribution plan to get medication to all hospitals in the state.
